The Center for Literacy Education and Research (CLEAR) is offering a new online professional development series designed to assist elementary teachers in Maximizing Instruction in the 90-Minute Block. In this series, participants will learn about management and organization to establish literacy-based classrooms with an emphasis of the Daily 5. Participants will learn about the research and components of guided reading/small group instruction, managing the rest of the class with meaningful literacy-based activities, and record keeping (assessment, analysis of assessment, and determining when to move students). This is a great workshop to help understand how to manage and record the many ways teachers differentiate instruction to meet the needs of Response to Intervention (RtI).

This self-paced, online series includes 5 modules at the cost of $75 each or all five for $350! Optional course credit is available for an additional fee.

For more information about this series and how to register, please email Elizabeth Hopper at hoppere@purdue.edu.

Workshop fees are fully refundable until July 8th. After July 8th, no refunds will be issued.
